Selling the Dream is a stunning new book that celebrates the posters, brochures and magazines that were used to promote New Zealand tourism before 1960. In recent years New Zealand tourism posters and ephemera have become extremely collectable, as people have realised what an enormous contribution this visual material has made to our art and design story, and to shaping out national identity.

Selling the Dream should be mandatory reading at registration. It is an extraordinary, compelling and profound look at what happens to a marvellous game when those who love it make it matter too much. It does not shatter the dream, but places that dream in perfect, undeniable and realistic perspective.

A big part of selling the dream is showing them that not only is the dream possible, but also that it's possible for them. They have to believe in what they want for their dream AND they have to be committed to making it happen. 'Cause if they don't believe they can actually do it, why would they spend any money to make it happen?

Selling The Dream: What Your Clients Really Want

Dreaming of selling gold means theft. If you see yourself selling meat in the butchery then this is a sign of damaged reputation and contempt. Selling velvet indicates that you are lazy and lacking hope, while selling corals is a sign of weakness. If you are trying to sell your house, this portends material and sentimental losses.

To me, selling the dream is something you might see with Multilevel Marketing, Ponzi schemes, and online business "courses." It's also popular with junk food and alcohol marketers and real estate agents. The idea is you promote something that is unattainable and then sell a solution. Most of these "solutions" are only good for the one doing the selling.
